Some bare root stock may need additional help to break dormancy in the spring, including Birch and Oaks varieties. Lay the stock under wet material such as straw in a building or if outside, in the shade. Cover the wet material with plastic. Within a few days the buds will have begun to swell and the plants are ready for planting. Trees should NOT be planted in subfreezing temperatures or hot dry conditions. Conifer size is determined by the number of years grown. The first number refers to the number of years grown in the seedling bed, while the second number refers to the years grown in the transplant bed. For example, a 2-2 transplant has been grown for two years in a seedling bed at close spacing then placed in a transplant bed with greater spacing and grown for two more years.
